

An adventurous path to the kitchen

By Alexandra Greeley
Special to The Washington Examiner

When you come across a chef who is bursting with energy, intelligence and talent, you may just sit back and say “Wow.” Well-traveled and steeped in the lore of pastry arts, Brad Spates, who is the pastry chef at the cooking school Cookology at Dulles Town Center, is a cooking inspiration, a one-of-a-kind guy, someone who turned down a place at MIT to bake; who travels to Tibet with his dog; who has owned and cooked for his own tiny restaurant in Beijing and who, as executive chef, makes cupcakes for Lola’s in Leesburg. Aside from all that, he works long hours at Cookology, baking, cooking and teaching.

A graduate of both the Culinary Institute of America and the James Rumsey Technical Institute in Martinsburg, W.Va., Spates also has polished his baking skills with some of the best in his profession, including Master Chef Judeth Stains and Culinary Institute Award-winning chefs Steve Brown and Steve Weiss, executive pastry chefs of the Trump Taj Mahal and Caesars Palace in Las Vegas.

For someone who acknowledges that his earliest culinary training was working at a Dunkin’ Donuts in New York City, Spates has come a long way, baby.

“I loved making doughnuts,” he said. “I loved the fast pace, and the fact you could think about 110 things at once, which I loved. I love working 80 hours a week. I love to keep moving.”

Imagine that at the age of 16, after turning down a scholarship to MIT, a teen turns up at the Culinary Institute.

“I was really too young to be a student, because the youngest they take you is 17 years old,” he said, adding he then went to the Cordon Bleu in Paris. When he returned to the Culinary Institute later, Spates spent a year studying classical French cooking, and the second year studying pastry.

“I love the art side of cooking, so I really love pastry,” he said.

After graduation, he went back to Paris, where he signed on to a restaurant as a line cook, but advanced to executive chef and pastry chef after six months. After five years in France, Spates took a year off to travel throughout Asia, ending up in Beijing owning his French-American restaurant.

“At first, we sold only sandwiches,” he said, admitting that since he did not speak Mandarin, he relied on his English-speaking staffers for some rather critical help: ordering food, helping customers and organizing his cooks. “After a year, it became popular and we served Italian and Ameri-

Brad Spates is the pastry chef at the school Cookology at Dulles Town Center.

SAMUEL CORUM/FOR THE WASHINGTON EXAMINER

What is your comfort food?

Vanilla wafers, yeah, vanilla wafers. I love everything about them.

Which is your favorite dessert?

Anything with bitter fruit or desserts with heat, that are spicy. Any sorbet, but nothing that is an American classic.

What has been your luckiest moment?

It has to do with my fiancée. I don’t know what to say; we’ve been together forever.

Which is your favorite restaurant?

Tad’s Steakhouse in San Francisco. It reminds me of Waffle House. It’s greasy, heavy food ... covered in onions. Wine glasses are covered in Saran Wrap. It’s delicious food you don’t have to think about. It’s open 24 hours.

What’s in your fridge?

Haven’t been home in about two weeks. Jell-O pudding cups, ice cream sandwiches, Mountain Dew — mostly Mountain Dew.

can duck recipes. I hate cooking duck.”

After selling his restaurant and moving to the D.C. area, Spates began baking in earnest, first by working at the from-scratch Lola’s Cookies and Treats, and then coming to Cookology as its pastry chef and teacher. Now, Spates pitches in to help the executive chef, Ian Douglass, with some of the savory cooking classes and wine dinners. For all his work, he draws upon his background in classical French and American cuisine.

“The food I make,” he said, “I just use a lot of cheese, spices and pepper flavors with such unusual components as agar, aloe, liquid nitrogen, guar gum, agave root and yak butter. I like things that are complex.”

So it should surprise no one that this offbeat guy looks for inspiration in hundred-year-old cookbooks and spends whatever spare time he has dreaming up crazy desserts such as the “Alice in Wonderland”-themed cake the studio hired him to produce for the film’s premiere. It also should

IF YOU GO
Cookology

» Where: Dulles Town Center, 21100 Dulles Town Circle, Sterling
» Info: 703-433-1909
» Hours: 10 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. Monday to Saturday; 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday

be no surprise that he has spent the past three years perfecting cupcakes and making big, splashy cakes, such as the $24,000 “steam punk” cake he created for a nightclub.

“It fed 1,500 people,” he said. “It had 7,500 steam pumps, and it was all edible.”

Although he said he has settled down, who will be surprised that at some point this young guy goes off to fulfill another dream?

“I want to go back to the [Culinary Institute] because I want to earn a grilling master’s chef jacket,” he said.

Scott Greenberg » The Vine Guy Wines good for Father’s Day

This weekend is Father’s Day. In my house, that means that I am presented with gifts that are suspiciously correlated with specific chores on my wife’s “honey do” list. For example, last year, I got a really cool cordless power tool set, including a drill and circular saw. I wasn’t skeptical until I noticed that the battery pack was already fully charged and a pile of lumber had mysteriously materialized overnight in our backyard. Before I could say, “um, thanks?” I was sawing, drilling and hammering a frame for my wife’s new vegetable garden.

But the one genuine luxury that always awaits me at the end of the day is dinner. I get to throw a couple of thick-cut porterhouse steaks on the grill and open up a great bottle of wine — assuming of course, all of my chores are done.

To kick off Father’s Day on the right note, pop open a bottle of Non-vintage Pommery “Pop” Extra Dry Champagne from Reims, France ($50). Tiny bubbles carry hints of citrus fruit and creamy yeast on the floral bouquet. The palate poses a creamy mouthfeel with notes of crisp green apple, nectarine and pear. Hints of citrus highlight the medium-crisp finish and the bubbles add a certain measure of elegance. Perfect all by itself and even better with oysters on the half shell.

Of course, a big, fat juicy steak is always a sure-fire way to reward dad on his special day, especially if you pair it with the 2006 Mercury The Father Red Wine Blend from Alexander Valley, California ($34). This powerful red wine is a blend of cabernet franc, merlot and petit verdot and is big enough to stand up to heartier fare. Scents of black plums, cocoa and espresso entice the nose while flavors of earthy red plum and black cherry coat the palate on the well-balanced frame. The sweet tannins provide great structure, capable of cutting through the fat in the meat while delivering a long finish where notes of blackberry jam and roasted coffee leave a wonderful impression.

One of the varietals that I routinely head for when I am in the mood for grilled lamb is Shiraz. There is something about the big tannins and peppery frame that seem to be made for lamb. The 2003 Charles Melton Shiraz “The Father In-Law” from the Barossa Valley in South Australia ($19) has everything that I am looking for. From the warm bouquet of black cherry, cassis and pepper to the flavorful and muscular frame of jammy black fruit, blueberry liqueur and spices, this well-balanced wine has a lot to offer. The notes of toasty oak and cracked black pepper add a spicy character to the long, powerful finish.

If your Father’s Day celebration requires a little “old world” charm, try the 2006 Papa Luna Old Vine Red that hails from Calatayud, Spain ($18). This blend of old vine Garnacha, Syrah, Monastrell and Carignan is aged for five months in used French and American oak which lends a light touch of oak, cedar and vanilla to the earthy nose. The plush palate delivers layers of dark boysenberry, black cherry and smokey plum on the attack and notes of cigar box and vanilla on the velvety smooth finish. This would really pair well with dry-rubbed babyback ribs or grilled pork chops.

From the Piedmont region of Italy comes the wonderfully textured 2005 Viberti Barolo “Buon Padre” ($47). This classic Nebbiolo wine is for any “good father” who wants to enjoy a little pasta with Bolognese sauce this weekend. The aromas of earthy plum, orange peel and smoky cedar give way to flavors of cassis, blackberries and roasted meat upfront and hint of dried cherry and tobacco on the powerful finish. The soft tannins give this wine elegant structure and age-ability so you can enjoy it now or save it for future celebrations.

I had the good fortune to run into Stephen Cary — the winemaker at Yamhill Winery in Willamette Valley, Oregon — in a local wine shop a couple of months ago. He was pouring samples of the 2006 Yamhill Winery Tall Poppy Pinot Noir ($50). Stephen explained the phrase “tall poppy” is a New Zealand expression that refers to a flamboyant extrovert or an ambitious bloke whose reach is beyond his grasp. While it may appear to be a derogatory term, in the end it describes a person who talks the big talk but then actually delivers, as does this wine, which possesses a remarkably perfumed nose of wild strawberries and bright cherries leading to lush flavors of dark strawberry, red plum and cherry cola. Hints of mocha remain delicate and charming all the way through to the elegant finish. If your plans include grilled salmon, then your salmon needs a Tall Poppy.

An adventurous path to the kitchen

By Alexandra Greeley
Special to The Washington Examiner

When you come across a chef who is bursting with energy, intelligence and talent, you may just sit back and say “Wow.” Well-traveled and steeped in the lore of pastry arts, Brad Spates, who is the pastry chef at the cooking school Cookology at Dulles Town Center, is a cooking inspiration, a one-of-a-kind guy, someone who turned down a place at MIT to bake; who travels to Tibet with his dog; who has owned and cooked for his own tiny restaurant in Beijing and who, as executive chef, makes cupcakes for Lola’s in Leesburg. Aside from all that, he works long hours at Cookology, baking, cooking and teaching.

A graduate of both the Culinary Institute of America and the James Rumsey Technical Institute in Martinsburg, W.Va., Spates also has polished his baking skills with some of the best in his profession, including Master Chef Judeth Stains and Culinary Institute Award-winning chefs Steve Brown and Steve Weiss, executive pastry chefs of the Trump Taj Mahal and Caesars Palace in Las Vegas.

For someone who acknowledges that his earliest culinary training was working at a Dunkin’ Donuts in New York City, Spates has come a long way, baby.

“I loved making doughnuts,” he said. “I loved the fast pace, and the fact you could think about 110 things at once, which I loved. I love working 80 hours a week. I love to keep moving.”

Imagine that at the age of 16, after turning down a scholarship to MIT, a teen turns up at the Culinary Institute.

“I was really too young to be a student, because the youngest they take you is 17 years old,” he said, adding he then went to the Cordon Bleu in Paris. When he returned to the Culinary Institute later, Spates spent a year studying classical French cooking, and the second year studying pastry.

“I love the art side of cooking, so I really love pastry,” he said.

After graduation, he went back to Paris, where he signed on to a restaurant as a line cook, but advanced to executive chef and pastry chef after six months. After five years in France, Spates took a year off to travel throughout Asia, ending up in Beijing owning his French-American restaurant.

“At first, we sold only sandwiches,” he said, admitting that since he did not speak Mandarin, he relied on his English-speaking staffers for some rather critical help: ordering food, helping customers and organizing his cooks. “After a year, it became popular and we served Italian and Ameri-

Brad Spates is the pastry chef at the school Cookology at Dulles Town Center.

SAMUEL CORUM/FOR THE WASHINGTON EXAMINER

What is your comfort food?

Vanilla wafers, yeah, vanilla wafers. I love everything about them.

Which is your favorite dessert?

Anything with bitter fruit or desserts with heat, that are spicy. Any sorbet, but nothing that is an American classic.

What has been your luckiest moment?

It has to do with my fiancée. I don’t know what to say; we’ve been together forever.

Which is your favorite restaurant?

Tad’s Steakhouse in San Francisco. It reminds me of Waffle House. It’s greasy, heavy food ... covered in onions. Wine glasses are covered in Saran Wrap. It’s delicious food you don’t have to think about. It’s open 24 hours.

What’s in your fridge?

Haven’t been home in about two weeks. Jell-O pudding cups, ice cream sandwiches, Mountain Dew — mostly Mountain Dew.

can duck recipes. I hate cooking duck.”

After selling his restaurant and moving to the D.C. area, Spates began baking in earnest, first by working at the from-scratch Lola’s Cookies and Treats, and then coming to Cookology as its pastry chef and teacher. Now, Spates pitches in to help the executive chef, Ian Douglass, with some of the savory cooking classes and wine dinners. For all his work, he draws upon his background in classical French and American cuisine.

“The food I make,” he said, “I just use a lot of cheese, spices and pepper flavors with such unusual components as agar, aloe, liquid nitrogen, guar gum, agave root and yak butter. I like things that are complex.”

So it should surprise no one that this offbeat guy looks for inspiration in hundred-year-old cookbooks and spends whatever spare time he has dreaming up crazy desserts such as the “Alice in Wonderland”-themed cake the studio hired him to produce for the film’s premiere. It also should

IF YOU GO Cookology

» Where: Dulles Town Center, 21100 Dulles Town Circle, Sterling
» Info: 703-433-1909
» Hours: 10 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. Monday to Saturday; 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday

be no surprise that he has spent the past three years perfecting cupcakes and making big, splashy cakes, such as the $24,000 “steam punk” cake he created for a nightclub.

“It fed 1,500 people,” he said. “It had 7,500 steam pumps, and it was all edible.”

Although he said he has settled down, who will be surprised that at some point this young guy goes off to fulfill another dream?

“I want to go back to the [Culinary Institute] because I want to earn a grilling master’s chef jacket,” he said.

Scott Greenberg » The Vine Guy Wines good for Father’s Day

This weekend is Father’s Day. In my house, that means that I am presented with gifts that are suspiciously correlated with specific chores on my wife’s “honey do” list. For example, last year, I got a really cool cordless power tool set, including a drill and circular saw. I wasn’t skeptical until I noticed that the battery pack was already fully charged and a pile of lumber had mysteriously materialized overnight in our backyard. Before I could say, “um, thanks?” I was sawing, drilling and hammering a frame for my wife’s new vegetable garden.

But the one genuine luxury that always awaits me at the end of the day is dinner. I get to throw a couple of thick-cut porterhouse steaks on the grill and open up a great bottle of wine — assuming of course, all of my chores are done.

To kick off Father’s Day on the right note, pop open a bottle of Non-vintage Pommery “Pop” Extra Dry Champagne from Reims, France ($50). Tiny bubbles carry hints of citrus fruit and creamy yeast on the floral bouquet. The palate poses a creamy mouthfeel with notes of crisp green apple, nectarine and pear. Hints of citrus highlight the medium-crisp finish and the bubbles add a certain measure of elegance. Perfect all by itself and even better with oysters on the half shell.

Of course, a big, fat juicy steak is always a sure-fire way to reward dad on his special day, especially if you pair it with the 2006 Mercury The Father Red Wine Blend from Alexander Valley, California ($34). This powerful red wine is a blend of cabernet franc, merlot and petit verdot and is big enough to stand up to heartier fare. Scents of black plums, cocoa and espresso entice the nose while flavors of earthy red plum and black cherry coat the palate on the well-balanced frame. The sweet tannins provide great structure, capable of cutting through the fat in the meat while delivering a long finish where notes of blackberry jam and roasted coffee leave a wonderful impression.

One of the varietals that I routinely head for when I am in the mood for grilled lamb is Shiraz. There is something about the big tannins and peppery frame that seem to be made for lamb. The 2003 Charles Melton Shiraz “The Father In-Law” from the Barossa Valley in South Australia ($19) has everything that I am looking for. From the warm bouquet of black cherry, cassis and pepper to the flavorful and muscular frame of jammy black fruit, blueberry liqueur and spices, this well-balanced wine has a lot to offer. The notes of toasty oak and cracked black pepper add a spicy character to the long, powerful finish.

If your Father’s Day celebration requires a little “old world” charm, try the 2006 Papa Luna Old Vine Red that hails from Calatayud, Spain ($18). This blend of old vine Garnacha, Syrah, Monastrell and Carignan is aged for five months in used French and American oak which lends a light touch of oak, cedar and vanilla to the earthy nose. The plush palate delivers layers of dark boysenberry, black cherry and smokey plum on the attack and notes of cigar box and vanilla on the velvety smooth finish. This would really pair well with dry-rubbed babyback ribs or grilled pork chops.

From the Piedmont region of Italy comes the wonderfully textured 2005 Viberti Barolo “Buon Padre” ($47). This classic Nebbiolo wine is for any “good father” who wants to enjoy a little pasta with Bolognese sauce this weekend. The aromas of earthy plum, orange peel and smoky cedar give way to flavors of cassis, blackberries and roasted meat upfront and hint of dried cherry and tobacco on the powerful finish. The soft tannins give this wine elegant structure and age-ability so you can enjoy it now or save it for future celebrations.

I had the good fortune to run into Stephen Cary — the winemaker at Yamhill Winery in Willamette Valley, Oregon — in a local wine shop a couple of months ago. He was pouring samples of the 2006 Yamhill Winery Tall Poppy Pinot Noir ($50). Stephen explained the phrase “tall poppy” is a New Zealand expression that refers to a flamboyant extrovert or an ambitious bloke whose reach is beyond his grasp. While it may appear to be a derogatory term, in the end it describes a person who talks the big talk but then actually delivers, as does this wine, which possesses a remarkably perfumed nose of wild strawberries and bright cherries leading to lush flavors of dark strawberry, red plum and cherry cola. Hints of mocha remain delicate and charming all the way through to the elegant finish. If your plans include grilled salmon, then your salmon needs a Tall Poppy.

An adventurous path to the kitchen

By Alexandra Greeley
Special to The Washington Examiner

When you come across a chef who is bursting with energy, intelligence and talent, you may just sit back and say “Wow.” Well-traveled and steeped in the lore of pastry arts, Brad Spates, who is the pastry chef at the cooking school Cookology at Dulles Town Center, is a cooking inspiration, a one-of-a-kind guy, someone who turned down a place at MIT to bake; who travels to Tibet with his dog; who has owned and cooked for his own tiny restaurant in Beijing and who, as executive chef, makes cupcakes for Lola’s in Leesburg. Aside from all that, he works long hours at Cookology, baking, cooking and teaching.

A graduate of both the Culinary Institute of America and the James Rumsey Technical Institute in Martinsburg, W.Va., Spates also has polished his baking skills with some of the best in his profession, including Master Chef Judeth Stains and Culinary Institute Award-winning chefs Steve Brown and Steve Weiss, executive pastry chefs of the Trump Taj Mahal and Caesars Palace in Las Vegas.

For someone who acknowledges that his earliest culinary training was working at a Dunkin’ Donuts in New York City, Spates has come a long way, baby.

“I loved making doughnuts,” he said. “I loved the fast pace, and the fact you could think about 110 things at once, which I loved. I love working 80 hours a week. I love to keep moving.”

Imagine that at the age of 16, after turning down a scholarship to MIT, a teen turns up at the Culinary Institute.

“I was really too young to be a student, because the youngest they take you is 17 years old,” he said, adding he then went to the Cordon Bleu in Paris. When he returned to the Culinary Institute later, Spates spent a year studying classical French cooking, and the second year studying pastry.

“I love the art side of cooking, so I really love pastry,” he said.

After graduation, he went back to Paris, where he signed on to a restaurant as a line cook, but advanced to executive chef and pastry chef after six months. After five years in France, Spates took a year off to travel throughout Asia, ending up in Beijing owning his French-American restaurant.

“At first, we sold only sandwiches,” he said, admitting that since he did not speak Mandarin, he relied on his English-speaking staffers for some rather critical help: ordering food, helping customers and organizing his cooks. “After a year, it became popular and we served Italian and Ameri-

SAMUEL CORUM/FOR THE WASHINGTON EXAMINER

Brad Spates is the pastry chef at the school Cookology at Dulles Town Center.

What is your comfort food?

Vanilla wafers, yeah, vanilla wafers. I love everything about them.

Which is your favorite dessert?

Anything with bitter fruit or desserts with heat, that are spicy. Any sorbet, but nothing that is an American classic.

What has been your luckiest moment?

It has to do with my fiancée. I don’t know what to say; we’ve been together forever.

Which is your favorite restaurant?

Tad’s Steakhouse in San Francisco. It reminds me of Waffle House. It’s greasy, heavy food ... covered in onions. Wine glasses are covered in Saran Wrap. It’s delicious food you don’t have to think about. It’s open 24 hours.

What’s in your fridge?

Haven’t been home in about two weeks. Jell-O pudding cups, ice cream sandwiches, Mountain Dew — mostly Mountain Dew.

can duck recipes. I hate cooking duck.”

After selling his restaurant and moving to the D.C. area, Spates began baking in earnest, first by working at the from-scratch Lola’s Cookies and Treats, and then coming to Cookology as its pastry chef and teacher. Now, Spates pitches in to help the executive chef, Ian Douglass, with some of the savory cooking classes and wine dinners. For all his work, he draws upon his background in classical French and American cuisine.

“The food I make,” he said, “I just use a lot of cheese, spices and pepper flavors with such unusual components as agar, aloe, liquid nitrogen, guar gum, agave root and yak butter. I like things that are complex.”

So it should surprise no one that this offbeat guy looks for inspiration in hundred-year-old cookbooks and spends whatever spare time he has dreaming up crazy desserts such as the “Alice in Wonderland”-themed cake the studio hired him to produce for the film’s premiere. It also should

IF YOU GO Cookology

» Where: Dulles Town Center, 21100 Dulles Town Circle, Sterling
» Info: 703-433-1909
» Hours: 10 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. Monday to Saturday; 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday

be no surprise that he has spent the past three years perfecting cupcakes and making big, splashy cakes, such as the $24,000 “steam punk” cake he created for a nightclub.

“It fed 1,500 people,” he said. “It had 7,500 steam pumps, and it was all edible.”

Although he said he has settled down, who will be surprised that at some point this young guy goes off to fulfill another dream?

“I want to go back to the [Culinary Institute] because I want to earn a grilling master’s chef jacket,” he said.

Scott Greenberg » The Vine Guy Wines good for Father’s Day

This weekend is Father’s Day. In my house, that means that I am presented with gifts that are suspiciously correlated with specific chores on my wife’s “honey do” list. For example, last year, I got a really cool cordless power tool set, including a drill and circular saw. I wasn’t skeptical until I noticed that the battery pack was already fully charged and a pile of lumber had mysteriously materialized overnight in our backyard. Before I could say, “um, thanks?” I was sawing, drilling and hammering a frame for my wife’s new vegetable garden.

But the one genuine luxury that always awaits me at the end of the day is dinner. I get to throw a couple of thick-cut porterhouse steaks on the grill and open up a great bottle of wine — assuming of course, all of my chores are done.

To kick off Father’s Day on the right note, pop open a bottle of Non-vintage Pommery “Pop” Extra Dry Champagne from Reims, France ($50). Tiny bubbles carry hints of citrus fruit and creamy yeast on the floral bouquet. The palate poses a creamy mouthfeel with notes of crisp green apple, nectarine and pear. Hints of citrus highlight the medium-crisp finish and the bubbles add a certain measure of elegance. Perfect all by itself and even better with oysters on the half shell.

Of course, a big, fat juicy steak is always a sure-fire way to reward dad on his special day, especially if you pair it with the 2006 Mercury The Father Red Wine Blend from Alexander Valley, California ($34). This powerful red wine is a blend of cabernet franc, merlot and petit verdot and is big enough to stand up to heartier fare. Scents of black plums, cocoa and espresso entice the nose while flavors of earthy red plum and black cherry coat the palate on the well-balanced frame. The sweet tannins provide great structure, capable of cutting through the fat in the meat while delivering a long finish where notes of blackberry jam and roasted coffee leave a wonderful impression.

One of the varietals that I routinely head for when I am in the mood for grilled lamb is Shiraz. There is something about the big tannins and peppery frame that seem to be made for lamb. The 2003 Charles Melton Shiraz “The Father In-Law” from the Barossa Valley in South Australia ($19) has everything that I am looking for. From the warm bouquet of black cherry, cassis and pepper to the flavorful and muscular frame of jammy black fruit, blueberry liqueur and spices, this well-balanced wine has a lot to offer. The notes of toasty oak and cracked black pepper add a spicy character to the long, powerful finish.

If your Father’s Day celebration requires a little “old world” charm, try the 2006 Papa Luna Old Vine Red that hails from Calatayud, Spain ($18). This blend of old vine Garnacha, Syrah, Monastrell and Carignan is aged for five months in used French and American oak which lends a light touch of oak, cedar and vanilla to the earthy nose. The plush palate delivers layers of dark boysenberry, black cherry and smokey plum on the attack and notes of cigar box and vanilla on the velvety smooth finish. This would really pair well with dry-rubbed babyback ribs or grilled pork chops.

From the Piedmont region of Italy comes the wonderfully textured 2005 Viberti Barolo “Buon Padre” ($47). This classic Nebbiolo wine is for any “good father” who wants to enjoy a little pasta with Bolognese sauce this weekend. The aromas of earthy plum, orange peel and smoky cedar give way to flavors of cassis, blackberries and roasted meat upfront and hint of dried cherry and tobacco on the powerful finish. The soft tannins give this wine elegant structure and age-ability so you can enjoy it now or save it for future celebrations.

I had the good fortune to run into Stephen Cary — the winemaker at Yamhill Winery in Willamette Valley, Oregon — in a local wine shop a couple of months ago. He was pouring samples of the 2006 Yamhill Winery Tall Poppy Pinot Noir ($50). Stephen explained the phrase “tall poppy” is a New Zealand expression that refers to a flamboyant extrovert or an ambitious bloke whose reach is beyond his grasp. While it may appear to be a derogatory term, in the end it describes a person who talks the big talk but then actually delivers, as does this wine, which possesses a remarkably perfumed nose of wild strawberries and bright cherries leading to lush flavors of dark strawberry, red plum and cherry cola. Hints of mocha remain delicate and charming all the way through to the elegant finish. If your plans include grilled salmon, then your salmon needs a Tall Poppy.

An adventurous path to the kitchen

By Alexandra Greeley
Special to The Washington Examiner

When you come across a chef who is bursting with energy, intelligence and talent, you may just sit back and say “Wow.” Well-traveled and steeped in the lore of pastry arts, Brad Spates, who is the pastry chef at the cooking school Cookology at Dulles Town Center, is a cooking inspiration, a one-of-a-kind guy, someone who turned down a place at MIT to bake; who travels to Tibet with his dog; who has owned and cooked for his own tiny restaurant in Beijing and who, as executive chef, makes cupcakes for Lola’s in Leesburg. Aside from all that, he works long hours at Cookology, baking, cooking and teaching.

A graduate of both the Culinary Institute of America and the James Rumsey Technical Institute in Martinsburg, W.Va., Spates also has polished his baking skills with some of the best in his profession, including Master Chef Judeth Stains and Culinary Institute Award-winning chefs Steve Brown and Steve Weiss, executive pastry chefs of the Trump Taj Mahal and Caesars Palace in Las Vegas.

For someone who acknowledges that his earliest culinary training was working at a Dunkin’ Donuts in New York City, Spates has come a long way, baby.

“I loved making doughnuts,” he said. “I loved the fast pace, and the fact you could think about 110 things at once, which I loved. I love working 80 hours a week. I love to keep moving.”

Imagine that at the age of 16, after turning down a scholarship to MIT, a teen turns up at the Culinary Institute.

“I was really too young to be a student, because the youngest they take you is 17 years old,” he said, adding he then went to the Cordon Bleu in Paris. When he returned to the Culinary Institute later, Spates spent a year studying classical French cooking, and the second year studying pastry.

“I love the art side of cooking, so I really love pastry,” he said.

After graduation, he went back to Paris, where he signed on to a restaurant as a line cook, but advanced to executive chef and pastry chef after six months. After five years in France, Spates took a year off to travel throughout Asia, ending up in Beijing owning his French-American restaurant.

“At first, we sold only sandwiches,” he said, admitting that since he did not speak Mandarin, he relied on his English-speaking staffers for some rather critical help: ordering food, helping customers and organizing his cooks. “After a year, it became popular and we served Italian and Ameri-

Brad Spates is the pastry chef at the school Cookology at Dulles Town Center.

SAMUEL CORUM/FOR THE WASHINGTON EXAMINER

What is your comfort food?

Vanilla wafers, yeah, vanilla wafers. I love everything about them.

Which is your favorite dessert?

Anything with bitter fruit or desserts with heat, that are spicy. Any sorbet, but nothing that is an American classic.

What has been your luckiest moment?

It has to do with my fiancée. I don’t know what to say; we’ve been together forever.

Which is your favorite restaurant?

Tad’s Steakhouse in San Francisco. It reminds me of Waffle House. It’s greasy, heavy food ... covered in onions. Wine glasses are covered in Saran Wrap. It’s delicious food you don’t have to think about. It’s open 24 hours.

What’s in your fridge?

Haven’t been home in about two weeks. Jell-O pudding cups, ice cream sandwiches, Mountain Dew — mostly Mountain Dew.

can duck recipes. I hate cooking duck.”

After selling his restaurant and moving to the D.C. area, Spates began baking in earnest, first by working at the from-scratch Lola’s Cookies and Treats, and then coming to Cookology as its pastry chef and teacher. Now, Spates pitches in to help the executive chef, Ian Douglass, with some of the savory cooking classes and wine dinners. For all his work, he draws upon his background in classical French and American cuisine.

“The food I make,” he said, “I just use a lot of cheese, spices and pepper flavors with such unusual components as agar, aloe, liquid nitrogen, guar gum, agave root and yak butter. I like things that are complex.”

So it should surprise no one that this offbeat guy looks for inspiration in hundred-year-old cookbooks and spends whatever spare time he has dreaming up crazy desserts such as the “Alice in Wonderland”-themed cake the studio hired him to produce for the film’s premiere. It also should

IF YOU GO Cookology

» Where: Dulles Town Center, 21100 Dulles Town Circle, Sterling
» Info: 703-433-1909
» Hours: 10 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. Monday to Saturday; 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday

be no surprise that he has spent the past three years perfecting cupcakes and making big, splashy cakes, such as the $24,000 “steam punk” cake he created for a nightclub.

“It fed 1,500 people,” he said. “It had 7,500 steam pumps, and it was all edible.”

Although he said he has settled down, who will be surprised that at some point this young guy goes off to fulfill another dream?

“I want to go back to the [Culinary Institute] because I want to earn a grilling master’s chef jacket,” he said.

Scott Greenberg » The Vine Guy Wines good for Father’s Day

This weekend is Father’s Day. In my house, that means that I am presented with gifts that are suspiciously correlated with specific chores on my wife’s “honey do” list. For example, last year, I got a really cool cordless power tool set, including a drill and circular saw. I wasn’t skeptical until I noticed that the battery pack was already fully charged and a pile of lumber had mysteriously materialized overnight in our backyard. Before I could say, “um, thanks?” I was sawing, drilling and hammering a frame for my wife’s new vegetable garden.

But the one genuine luxury that always awaits me at the end of the day is dinner. I get to throw a couple of thick-cut porterhouse steaks on the grill and open up a great bottle of wine — assuming of course, all of my chores are done.

To kick off Father’s Day on the right note, pop open a bottle of Non-vintage Pommery “Pop” Extra Dry Champagne from Reims, France ($50). Tiny bubbles carry hints of citrus fruit and creamy yeast on the floral bouquet. The palate poses a creamy mouthfeel with notes of crisp green apple, nectarine and pear. Hints of citrus highlight the medium-crisp finish and the bubbles add a certain measure of elegance. Perfect all by itself and even better with oysters on the half shell.

Of course, a big, fat juicy steak is always a sure-fire way to reward dad on his special day, especially if you pair it with the 2006 Mercury The Father Red Wine Blend from Alexander Valley, California ($34). This powerful red wine is a blend of cabernet franc, merlot and petit verdot and is big enough to stand up to heartier fare. Scents of black plums, cocoa and espresso entice the nose while flavors of earthy red plum and black cherry coat the palate on the well-balanced frame. The sweet tannins provide great structure, capable of cutting through the fat in the meat while delivering a long finish where notes of blackberry jam and roasted coffee leave a wonderful impression.

One of the varietals that I routinely head for when I am in the mood for grilled lamb is Shiraz. There is something about the big tannins and peppery frame that seem to be made for lamb. The 2003 Charles Melton Shiraz “The Father In-Law” from the Barossa Valley in South Australia ($19) has everything that I am looking for. From the warm bouquet of black cherry, cassis and pepper to the flavorful and muscular frame of jammy black fruit, blueberry liqueur and spices, this well-balanced wine has a lot to offer. The notes of toasty oak and cracked black pepper add a spicy character to the long, powerful finish.

If your Father’s Day celebration requires a little “old world” charm, try the 2006 Papa Luna Old Vine Red that hails from Calatayud, Spain ($18). This blend of old vine Garnacha, Syrah, Monastrell and Carignan is aged for five months in used French and American oak which lends a light touch of oak, cedar and vanilla to the earthy nose. The plush palate delivers layers of dark boysenberry, black cherry and smokey plum on the attack and notes of cigar box and vanilla on the velvety smooth finish. This would really pair well with dry-rubbed babyback ribs or grilled pork chops.

From the Piedmont region of Italy comes the wonderfully textured 2005 Viberti Barolo “Buon Padre” ($47). This classic Nebbiolo wine is for any “good father” who wants to enjoy a little pasta with Bolognese sauce this weekend. The aromas of earthy plum, orange peel and smoky cedar give way to flavors of cassis, blackberries and roasted meat upfront and hint of dried cherry and tobacco on the powerful finish. The soft tannins give this wine elegant structure and age-ability so you can enjoy it now or save it for future celebrations.

I had the good fortune to run into Stephen Cary — the winemaker at Yamhill Winery in Willamette Valley, Oregon — in a local wine shop a couple of months ago. He was pouring samples of the 2006 Yamhill Winery Tall Poppy Pinot Noir ($50). Stephen explained the phrase “tall poppy” is a New Zealand expression that refers to a flamboyant extrovert or an ambitious bloke whose reach is beyond his grasp. While it may appear to be a derogatory term, in the end it describes a person who talks the big talk but then actually delivers, as does this wine, which possesses a remarkably perfumed nose of wild strawberries and bright cherries leading to lush flavors of dark strawberry, red plum and cherry cola. Hints of mocha remain delicate and charming all the way through to the elegant finish. If your plans include grilled salmon, then your salmon needs a Tall Poppy.

An adventurous path to the kitchen

By Alexandra Greeley
Special to The Washington Examiner

When you come across a chef who is bursting with energy, intelligence and talent, you may just sit back and say “Wow.” Well-traveled and steeped in the lore of pastry arts, Brad Spates, who is the pastry chef at the cooking school Cookology at Dulles Town Center, is a cooking inspiration, a one-of-a-kind guy, someone who turned down a place at MIT to bake; who travels to Tibet with his dog; who has owned and cooked for his own tiny restaurant in Beijing and who, as executive chef, makes cupcakes for Lola’s in Leesburg. Aside from all that, he works long hours at Cookology, baking, cooking and teaching.

A graduate of both the Culinary Institute of America and the James Rumsey Technical Institute in Martinsburg, W.Va., Spates also has polished his baking skills with some of the best in his profession, including Master Chef Judeth Stains and Culinary Institute Award-winning chefs Steve Brown and Steve Weiss, executive pastry chefs of the Trump Taj Mahal and Caesars Palace in Las Vegas.

For someone who acknowledges that his earliest culinary training was working at a Dunkin’ Donuts in New York City, Spates has come a long way, baby.

“I loved making doughnuts,” he said. “I loved the fast pace, and the fact you could think about 110 things at once, which I loved. I love working 80 hours a week. I love to keep moving.”

Imagine that at the age of 16, after turning down a scholarship to MIT, a teen turns up at the Culinary Institute.

“I was really too young to be a student, because the youngest they take you is 17 years old,” he said, adding he then went to the Cordon Bleu in Paris. When he returned to the Culinary Institute later, Spates spent a year studying classical French cooking, and the second year studying pastry.

“I love the art side of cooking, so I really love pastry,” he said.

After graduation, he went back to Paris, where he signed on to a restaurant as a line cook, but advanced to executive chef and pastry chef after six months. After five years in France, Spates took a year off to travel throughout Asia, ending up in Beijing owning his French-American restaurant.

“At first, we sold only sandwiches,” he said, admitting that since he did not speak Mandarin, he relied on his English-speaking staffers for some rather critical help: ordering food, helping customers and organizing his cooks. “After a year, it became popular and we served Italian and Ameri-

Brad Spates is the pastry chef at the school Cookology at Dulles Town Center.

SAMUEL CORUM/FOR THE WASHINGTON EXAMINER

What is your comfort food?

Vanilla wafers, yeah, vanilla wafers. I love everything about them.

Which is your favorite dessert?

Anything with bitter fruit or desserts with heat, that are spicy. Any sorbet, but nothing that is an American classic.

What has been your luckiest moment?

It has to do with my fiancée. I don’t know what to say; we’ve been together forever.

Which is your favorite restaurant?

Tad’s Steakhouse in San Francisco. It reminds me of Waffle House. It’s greasy, heavy food ... covered in onions. Wine glasses are covered in Saran Wrap. It’s delicious food you don’t have to think about. It’s open 24 hours.

What’s in your fridge?

Haven’t been home in about two weeks. Jell-O pudding cups, ice cream sandwiches, Mountain Dew — mostly Mountain Dew.

can duck recipes. I hate cooking duck.”

After selling his restaurant and moving to the D.C. area, Spates began baking in earnest, first by working at the from-scratch Lola’s Cookies and Treats, and then coming to Cookology as its pastry chef and teacher. Now, Spates pitches in to help the executive chef, Ian Douglass, with some of the savory cooking classes and wine dinners. For all his work, he draws upon his background in classical French and American cuisine.

“The food I make,” he said, “I just use a lot of cheese, spices and pepper flavors with such unusual components as agar, aloe, liquid nitrogen, guar gum, agave root and yak butter. I like things that are complex.”

So it should surprise no one that this offbeat guy looks for inspiration in hundred-year-old cookbooks and spends whatever spare time he has dreaming up crazy desserts such as the “Alice in Wonderland”-themed cake the studio hired him to produce for the film’s premiere. It also should

IF YOU GO Cookology

» Where: Dulles Town Center, 21100 Dulles Town Circle, Sterling
» Info: 703-433-1909
» Hours: 10 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. Monday to Saturday; 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday

be no surprise that he has spent the past three years perfecting cupcakes and making big, splashy cakes, such as the $24,000 “steam punk” cake he created for a nightclub.

“It fed 1,500 people,” he said. “It had 7,500 steam pumps, and it was all edible.”

Although he said he has settled down, who will be surprised that at some point this young guy goes off to fulfill another dream?

“I want to go back to the [Culinary Institute] because I want to earn a grilling master’s chef jacket,” he said.

Scott Greenberg » The Vine Guy Wines good for Father’s Day

This weekend is Father’s Day. In my house, that means that I am presented with gifts that are suspiciously correlated with specific chores on my wife’s “honey do” list. For example, last year, I got a really cool cordless power tool set, including a drill and circular saw. I wasn’t skeptical until I noticed that the battery pack was already fully charged and a pile of lumber had mysteriously materialized overnight in our backyard. Before I could say, “um, thanks?” I was sawing, drilling and hammering a frame for my wife’s new vegetable garden.

But the one genuine luxury that always awaits me at the end of the day is dinner. I get to throw a couple of thick-cut porterhouse steaks on the grill and open up a great bottle of wine — assuming of course, all of my chores are done.

To kick off Father’s Day on the right note, pop open a bottle of Non-vintage Pommery “Pop” Extra Dry Champagne from Reims, France ($50). Tiny bubbles carry hints of citrus fruit and creamy yeast on the floral bouquet. The palate poses a creamy mouthfeel with notes of crisp green apple, nectarine and pear. Hints of citrus highlight the medium-crisp finish and the bubbles add a certain measure of elegance. Perfect all by itself and even better with oysters on the half shell.

Of course, a big, fat juicy steak is always a sure-fire way to reward dad on his special day, especially if you pair it with the 2006 Mercury The Father Red Wine Blend from Alexander Valley, California ($34). This powerful red wine is a blend of cabernet franc, merlot and petit verdot and is big enough to stand up to heartier fare. Scents of black plums, cocoa and espresso entice the nose while flavors of earthy red plum and black cherry coat the palate on the well-balanced frame. The sweet tannins provide great structure, capable of cutting through the fat in the meat while delivering a long finish where notes of blackberry jam and roasted coffee leave a wonderful impression.

One of the varietals that I routinely head for when I am in the mood for grilled lamb is Shiraz. There is something about the big tannins and peppery frame that seem to be made for lamb. The 2003 Charles Melton Shiraz “The Father In-Law” from the Barossa Valley in South Australia ($19) has everything that I am looking for. From the warm bouquet of black cherry, cassis and pepper to the flavorful and muscular frame of jammy black fruit, blueberry liqueur and spices, this well-balanced wine has a lot to offer. The notes of toasty oak and cracked black pepper add a spicy character to the long, powerful finish.

If your Father’s Day celebration requires a little “old world” charm, try the 2006 Papa Luna Old Vine Red that hails from Calatayud, Spain ($18). This blend of old vine Garnacha, Syrah, Monastrell and Carignan is aged for five months in used French and American oak which lends a light touch of oak, cedar and vanilla to the earthy nose. The plush palate delivers layers of dark boysenberry, black cherry and smokey plum on the attack and notes of cigar box and vanilla on the velvety smooth finish. This would really pair well with dry-rubbed babyback ribs or grilled pork chops.

From the Piedmont region of Italy comes the wonderfully textured 2005 Viberti Barolo “Buon Padre” ($47). This classic Nebbiolo wine is for any “good father” who wants to enjoy a little pasta with Bolognese sauce this weekend. The aromas of earthy plum, orange peel and smoky cedar give way to flavors of cassis, blackberries and roasted meat upfront and hint of dried cherry and tobacco on the powerful finish. The soft tannins give this wine elegant structure and age-ability so you can enjoy it now or save it for future celebrations.

I had the good fortune to run into Stephen Cary — the winemaker at Yamhill Winery in Willamette Valley, Oregon — in a local wine shop a couple of months ago. He was pouring samples of the 2006 Yamhill Winery Tall Poppy Pinot Noir ($50). Stephen explained the phrase “tall poppy” is a New Zealand expression that refers to a flamboyant extrovert or an ambitious bloke whose reach is beyond his grasp. While it may appear to be a derogatory term, in the end it describes a person who talks the big talk but then actually delivers, as does this wine, which possesses a remarkably perfumed nose of wild strawberries and bright cherries leading to lush flavors of dark strawberry, red plum and cherry cola. Hints of mocha remain delicate and charming all the way through to the elegant finish. If your plans include grilled salmon, then your salmon needs a Tall Poppy.

An adventurous path to the kitchen

By Alexandra Greeley
Special to The Washington Examiner

When you come across a chef who is bursting with energy, intelligence and talent, you may just sit back and say “Wow.” Well-traveled and steeped in the lore of pastry arts, Brad Spates, who is the pastry chef at the cooking school Cookology at Dulles Town Center, is a cooking inspiration, a one-of-a-kind guy, someone who turned down a place at MIT to bake; who travels to Tibet with his dog; who has owned and cooked for his own tiny restaurant in Beijing and who, as executive chef, makes cupcakes for Lola’s in Leesburg. Aside from all that, he works long hours at Cookology, baking, cooking and teaching.

A graduate of both the Culinary Institute of America and the James Rumsey Technical Institute in Martinsburg, W.Va., Spates also has polished his baking skills with some of the best in his profession, including Master Chef Judeth Stains and Culinary Institute Award-winning chefs Steve Brown and Steve Weiss, executive pastry chefs of the Trump Taj Mahal and Caesars Palace in Las Vegas.

For someone who acknowledges that his earliest culinary training was working at a Dunkin’ Donuts in New York City, Spates has come a long way, baby.

“I loved making doughnuts,” he said. “I loved the fast pace, and the fact you could think about 110 things at once, which I loved. I love working 80 hours a week. I love to keep moving.”

Imagine that at the age of 16, after turning down a scholarship to MIT, a teen turns up at the Culinary Institute.

“I was really too young to be a student, because the youngest they take you is 17 years old,” he said, adding he then went to the Cordon Bleu in Paris. When he returned to the Culinary Institute later, Spates spent a year studying classical French cooking, and the second year studying pastry.

“I love the art side of cooking, so I really love pastry,” he said.

After graduation, he went back to Paris, where he signed on to a restaurant as a line cook, but advanced to executive chef and pastry chef after six months. After five years in France, Spates took a year off to travel throughout Asia, ending up in Beijing owning his French-American restaurant.

“At first, we sold only sandwiches,” he said, admitting that since he did not speak Mandarin, he relied on his English-speaking staffers for some rather critical help: ordering food, helping customers and organizing his cooks. “After a year, it became popular and we served Italian and Ameri-

Brad Spates is the pastry chef at the school Cookology at Dulles Town Center.

SAMUEL CORUM/FOR THE WASHINGTON EXAMINER

What is your comfort food?

Vanilla wafers, yeah, vanilla wafers. I love everything about them.

Which is your favorite dessert?

Anything with bitter fruit or desserts with heat, that are spicy. Any sorbet, but nothing that is an American classic.

What has been your luckiest moment?

It has to do with my fiancée. I don’t know what to say; we’ve been together forever.

Which is your favorite restaurant?

Tad’s Steakhouse in San Francisco. It reminds me of Waffle House. It’s greasy, heavy food ... covered in onions. Wine glasses are covered in Saran Wrap. It’s delicious food you don’t have to think about. It’s open 24 hours.

What’s in your fridge?

Haven’t been home in about two weeks. Jell-O pudding cups, ice cream sandwiches, Mountain Dew — mostly Mountain Dew.

can duck recipes. I hate cooking duck.”

After selling his restaurant and moving to the D.C. area, Spates began baking in earnest, first by working at the from-scratch Lola’s Cookies and Treats, and then coming to Cookology as its pastry chef and teacher. Now, Spates pitches in to help the executive chef, Ian Douglass, with some of the savory cooking classes and wine dinners. For all his work, he draws upon his background in classical French and American cuisine.

“The food I make,” he said, “I just use a lot of cheese, spices and pepper flavors with such unusual components as agar, aloe, liquid nitrogen, guar gum, agave root and yak butter. I like things that are complex.”

So it should surprise no one that this offbeat guy looks for inspiration in hundred-year-old cookbooks and spends whatever spare time he has dreaming up crazy desserts such as the “Alice in Wonderland”-themed cake the studio hired him to produce for the film’s premiere. It also should

IF YOU GO Cookology

» Where: Dulles Town Center, 21100 Dulles Town Circle, Sterling
» Info: 703-433-1909
» Hours: 10 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. Monday to Saturday; 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday

be no surprise that he has spent the past three years perfecting cupcakes and making big, splashy cakes, such as the $24,000 “steam punk” cake he created for a nightclub.

“It fed 1,500 people,” he said. “It had 7,500 steam pumps, and it was all edible.”

Although he said he has settled down, who will be surprised that at some point this young guy goes off to fulfill another dream?

“I want to go back to the [Culinary Institute] because I want to earn a grilling master’s chef jacket,” he said.

Scott Greenberg » The Vine Guy Wines good for Father’s Day

This weekend is Father’s Day. In my house, that means that I am presented with gifts that are suspiciously correlated with specific chores on my wife’s “honey do” list. For example, last year, I got a really cool cordless power tool set, including a drill and circular saw. I wasn’t skeptical until I noticed that the battery pack was already fully charged and a pile of lumber had mysteriously materialized overnight in our backyard. Before I could say, “um, thanks?” I was sawing, drilling and hammering a frame for my wife’s new vegetable garden.

But the one genuine luxury that always awaits me at the end of the day is dinner. I get to throw a couple of thick-cut porterhouse steaks on the grill and open up a great bottle of wine — assuming of course, all of my chores are done.

To kick off Father’s Day on the right note, pop open a bottle of Non-vintage Pommery “Pop” Extra Dry Champagne from Reims, France ($50). Tiny bubbles carry hints of citrus fruit and creamy yeast on the floral bouquet. The palate poses a creamy mouthfeel with notes of crisp green apple, nectarine and pear. Hints of citrus highlight the medium-crisp finish and the bubbles add a certain measure of elegance. Perfect all by itself and even better with oysters on the half shell.

Of course, a big, fat juicy steak is always a sure-fire way to reward dad on his special day, especially if you pair it with the 2006 Mercury The Father Red Wine Blend from Alexander Valley, California ($34). This powerful red wine is a blend of cabernet franc, merlot and petit verdot and is big enough to stand up to heartier fare. Scents of black plums, cocoa and espresso entice the nose while flavors of earthy red plum and black cherry coat the palate on the well-balanced frame. The sweet tannins provide great structure, capable of cutting through the fat in the meat while delivering a long finish where notes of blackberry jam and roasted coffee leave a wonderful impression.

One of the varietals that I routinely head for when I am in the mood for grilled lamb is Shiraz. There is something about the big tannins and peppery frame that seem to be made for lamb. The 2003 Charles Melton Shiraz “The Father In-Law” from the Barossa Valley in South Australia ($19) has everything that I am looking for. From the warm bouquet of black cherry, cassis and pepper to the flavorful and muscular frame of jammy black fruit, blueberry liqueur and spices, this well-balanced wine has a lot to offer. The notes of toasty oak and cracked black pepper add a spicy character to the long, powerful finish.

If your Father’s Day celebration requires a little “old world” charm, try the 2006 Papa Luna Old Vine Red that hails from Calatayud, Spain ($18). This blend of old vine Garnacha, Syrah, Monastrell and Carignan is aged for five months in used French and American oak which lends a light touch of oak, cedar and vanilla to the earthy nose. The plush palate delivers layers of dark boysenberry, black cherry and smokey plum on the attack and notes of cigar box and vanilla on the velvety smooth finish. This would really pair well with dry-rubbed babyback ribs or grilled pork chops.

From the Piedmont region of Italy comes the wonderfully textured 2005 Viberti Barolo “Buon Padre” ($47). This classic Nebbiolo wine is for any “good father” who wants to enjoy a little pasta with Bolognese sauce this weekend. The aromas of earthy plum, orange peel and smoky cedar give way to flavors of cassis, blackberries and roasted meat upfront and hint of dried cherry and tobacco on the powerful finish. The soft tannins give this wine elegant structure and age-ability so you can enjoy it now or save it for future celebrations.

I had the good fortune to run into Stephen Cary — the winemaker at Yamhill Winery in Willamette Valley, Oregon — in a local wine shop a couple of months ago. He was pouring samples of the 2006 Yamhill Winery Tall Poppy Pinot Noir ($50). Stephen explained the phrase “tall poppy” is a New Zealand expression that refers to a flamboyant extrovert or an ambitious bloke whose reach is beyond his grasp. While it may appear to be a derogatory term, in the end it describes a person who talks the big talk but then actually delivers, as does this wine, which possesses a remarkably perfumed nose of wild strawberries and bright cherries leading to lush flavors of dark strawberry, red plum and cherry cola. Hints of mocha remain delicate and charming all the way through to the elegant finish. If your plans include grilled salmon, then your salmon needs a Tall Poppy.

An adventurous path to the kitchen

By Alexandra Greeley
Special to The Washington Examiner

When you come across a chef who is bursting with energy, intelligence and talent, you may just sit back and say “Wow.” Well-traveled and steeped in the lore of pastry arts, Brad Spates, who is the pastry chef at the cooking school Cookology at Dulles Town Center, is a cooking inspiration, a one-of-a-kind guy, someone who turned down a place at MIT to bake; who travels to Tibet with his dog; who has owned and cooked for his own tiny restaurant in Beijing and who, as executive chef, makes cupcakes for Lola’s in Leesburg. Aside from all that, he works long hours at Cookology, baking, cooking and teaching.

A graduate of both the Culinary Institute of America and the James Rumsey Technical Institute in Martinsburg, W.Va., Spates also has polished his baking skills with some of the best in his profession, including Master Chef Judeth Stains and Culinary Institute Award-winning chefs Steve Brown and Steve Weiss, executive pastry chefs of the Trump Taj Mahal and Caesars Palace in Las Vegas.

For someone who acknowledges that his earliest culinary training was working at a Dunkin’ Donuts in New York City, Spates has come a long way, baby.

“I loved making doughnuts,” he said. “I loved the fast pace, and the fact you could think about 110 things at once, which I loved. I love working 80 hours a week. I love to keep moving.”

Imagine that at the age of 16, after turning down a scholarship to MIT, a teen turns up at the Culinary Institute.

“I was really too young to be a student, because the youngest they take you is 17 years old,” he said, adding he then went to the Cordon Bleu in Paris. When he returned to the Culinary Institute later, Spates spent a year studying classical French cooking, and the second year studying pastry.

“I love the art side of cooking, so I really love pastry,” he said.

After graduation, he went back to Paris, where he signed on to a restaurant as a line cook, but advanced to executive chef and pastry chef after six months. After five years in France, Spates took a year off to travel throughout Asia, ending up in Beijing owning his French-American restaurant.

“At first, we sold only sandwiches,” he said, admitting that since he did not speak Mandarin, he relied on his English-speaking staffers for some rather critical help: ordering food, helping customers and organizing his cooks. “After a year, it became popular and we served Italian and Ameri-

Brad Spates is the pastry chef at the school Cookology at Dulles Town Center.

SAMUEL CORUM/FOR THE WASHINGTON EXAMINER

What is your comfort food?

Vanilla wafers, yeah, vanilla wafers. I love everything about them.

Which is your favorite dessert?

Anything with bitter fruit or desserts with heat, that are spicy. Any sorbet, but nothing that is an American classic.

What has been your luckiest moment?

It has to do with my fiancée. I don’t know what to say; we’ve been together forever.

Which is your favorite restaurant?

Tad’s Steakhouse in San Francisco. It reminds me of Waffle House. It’s greasy, heavy food ... covered in onions. Wine glasses are covered in Saran Wrap. It’s delicious food you don’t have to think about. It’s open 24 hours.

What’s in your fridge?

Haven’t been home in about two weeks. Jell-O pudding cups, ice cream sandwiches, Mountain Dew — mostly Mountain Dew.

can duck recipes. I hate cooking duck.”

After selling his restaurant and moving to the D.C. area, Spates began baking in earnest, first by working at the from-scratch Lola’s Cookies and Treats, and then coming to Cookology as its pastry chef and teacher. Now, Spates pitches in to help the executive chef, Ian Douglass, with some of the savory cooking classes and wine dinners. For all his work, he draws upon his background in classical French and American cuisine.

“The food I make,” he said, “I just use a lot of cheese, spices and pepper flavors with such unusual components as agar, aloe, liquid nitrogen, guar gum, agave root and yak butter. I like things that are complex.”

So it should surprise no one that this offbeat guy looks for inspiration in hundred-year-old cookbooks and spends whatever spare time he has dreaming up crazy desserts such as the “Alice in Wonderland”-themed cake the studio hired him to produce for the film’s premiere. It also should

IF YOU GO
Cookology

» Where: Dulles Town Center, 21100 Dulles Town Circle, Sterling
» Info: 703-433-1909
» Hours: 10 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. Monday to Saturday; 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday

be no surprise that he has spent the past three years perfecting cupcakes and making big, splashy cakes, such as the $24,000 “steam punk” cake he created for a nightclub.

“It fed 1,500 people,” he said. “It had 7,500 steam pumps, and it was all edible.”

Although he said he has settled down, who will be surprised that at some point this young guy goes off to fulfill another dream?

“I want to go back to the [Culinary Institute] because I want to earn a grilling master’s chef jacket,” he said.

Scott Greenberg » The Vine Guy Wines good for Father’s Day

This weekend is Father’s Day. In my house, that means that I am presented with gifts that are suspiciously correlated with specific chores on my wife’s “honey do” list. For example, last year, I got a really cool cordless power tool set, including a drill and circular saw. I wasn’t skeptical until I noticed that the battery pack was already fully charged and a pile of lumber had mysteriously materialized overnight in our backyard. Before I could say, “um, thanks?” I was sawing, drilling and hammering a frame for my wife’s new vegetable garden.

But the one genuine luxury that always awaits me at the end of the day is dinner. I get to throw a couple of thick-cut porterhouse steaks on the grill and open up a great bottle of wine — assuming of course, all of my chores are done.

To kick off Father’s Day on the right note, pop open a bottle of Non-vintage Pommery “Pop” Extra Dry Champagne from Reims, France ($50). Tiny bubbles carry hints of citrus fruit and creamy yeast on the floral bouquet. The palate poses a creamy mouthfeel with notes of crisp green apple, nectarine and pear. Hints of citrus highlight the medium-crisp finish and the bubbles add a certain measure of elegance. Perfect all by itself and even better with oysters on the half shell.

Of course, a big, fat juicy steak is always a sure-fire way to reward dad on his special day, especially if you pair it with the 2006 Mercury The Father Red Wine Blend from Alexander Valley, California ($34). This powerful red wine is a blend of cabernet franc, merlot and petit verdot and is big enough to stand up to heartier fare. Scents of black plums, cocoa and espresso entice the nose while flavors of earthy red plum and black cherry coat the palate on the well-balanced frame. The sweet tannins provide great structure, capable of cutting through the fat in the meat while delivering a long finish where notes of blackberry jam and roasted coffee leave a wonderful impression.

One of the varietals that I routinely head for when I am in the mood for grilled lamb is Shiraz. There is something about the big tannins and peppery frame that seem to be made for lamb. The 2003 Charles Melton Shiraz “The Father In-Law” from the Barossa Valley in South Australia ($19) has everything that I am looking for. From the warm bouquet of black cherry, cassis and pepper to the flavorful and muscular frame of jammy black fruit, blueberry liqueur and spices, this well-balanced wine has a lot to offer. The notes of toasty oak and cracked black pepper add a spicy character to the long, powerful finish.

If your Father’s Day celebration requires a little “old world” charm, try the 2006 Papa Luna Old Vine Red that hails from Calatayud, Spain ($18). This blend of old vine Garnacha, Syrah, Monastrell and Carignan is aged for five months in used French and American oak which lends a light touch of oak, cedar and vanilla to the earthy nose. The plush palate delivers layers of dark boysenberry, black cherry and smokey plum on the attack and notes of cigar box and vanilla on the velvety smooth finish. This would really pair well with dry-rubbed babyback ribs or grilled pork chops.

From the Piedmont region of Italy comes the wonderfully textured 2005 Viberti Barolo “Buon Padre” ($47). This classic Nebbiolo wine is for any “good father” who wants to enjoy a little pasta with Bolognese sauce this weekend. The aromas of earthy plum, orange peel and smoky cedar give way to flavors of cassis, blackberries and roasted meat upfront and hint of dried cherry and tobacco on the powerful finish. The soft tannins give this wine elegant structure and age-ability so you can enjoy it now or save it for future celebrations.

I had the good fortune to run into Stephen Cary — the winemaker at Yamhill Winery in Willamette Valley, Oregon — in a local wine shop a couple of months ago. He was pouring samples of the 2006 Yamhill Winery Tall Poppy Pinot Noir ($50). Stephen explained the phrase “tall poppy” is a New Zealand expression that refers to a flamboyant extrovert or an ambitious bloke whose reach is beyond his grasp. While it may appear to be a derogatory term, in the end it describes a person who talks the big talk but then actually delivers, as does this wine, which possesses a remarkably perfumed nose of wild strawberries and bright cherries leading to lush flavors of dark strawberry, red plum and cherry cola. Hints of mocha remain delicate and charming all the way through to the elegant finish. If your plans include grilled salmon, then your salmon needs a Tall Poppy.

An adventurous path to the kitchen

By Alexandra Greeley
Special to The Washington Examiner

When you come across a chef who is bursting with energy, intelligence and talent, you may just sit back and say “Wow.” Well-traveled and steeped in the lore of pastry arts, Brad Spates, who is the pastry chef at the cooking school Cookology at Dulles Town Center, is a cooking inspiration, a one-of-a-kind guy, someone who turned down a place at MIT to bake; who travels to Tibet with his dog; who has owned and cooked for his own tiny restaurant in Beijing and who, as executive chef, makes cupcakes for Lola’s in Leesburg. Aside from all that, he works long hours at Cookology, baking, cooking and teaching.

A graduate of both the Culinary Institute of America and the James Rumsey Technical Institute in Martinsburg, W.Va., Spates also has polished his baking skills with some of the best in his profession, including Master Chef Judeth Stains and Culinary Institute Award-winning chefs Steve Brown and Steve Weiss, executive pastry chefs of the Trump Taj Mahal and Caesars Palace in Las Vegas.

For someone who acknowledges that his earliest culinary training was working at a Dunkin’ Donuts in New York City, Spates has come a long way, baby.

“I loved making doughnuts,” he said. “I loved the fast pace, and the fact you could think about 110 things at once, which I loved. I love working 80 hours a week. I love to keep moving.”

Imagine that at the age of 16, after turning down a scholarship to MIT, a teen turns up at the Culinary Institute.

“I was really too young to be a student, because the youngest they take you is 17 years old,” he said, adding he then went to the Cordon Bleu in Paris. When he returned to the Culinary Institute later, Spates spent a year studying classical French cooking, and the second year studying pastry.

“I love the art side of cooking, so I really love pastry,” he said.

After graduation, he went back to Paris, where he signed on to a restaurant as a line cook, but advanced to executive chef and pastry chef after six months. After five years in France, Spates took a year off to travel throughout Asia, ending up in Beijing owning his French-American restaurant.

“At first, we sold only sandwiches,” he said, admitting that since he did not speak Mandarin, he relied on his English-speaking staffers for some rather critical help: ordering food, helping customers and organizing his cooks. “After a year, it became popular and we served Italian and Ameri-

Brad Spates is the pastry chef at the school Cookology at Dulles Town Center.

SAMUEL CORUM/FOR THE WASHINGTON EXAMINER

What is your comfort food?

Vanilla wafers, yeah, vanilla wafers. I love everything about them.

Which is your favorite dessert?

Anything with bitter fruit or desserts with heat, that are spicy. Any sorbet, but nothing that is an American classic.

What has been your luckiest moment?

It has to do with my fiancée. I don’t know what to say; we’ve been together forever.

Which is your favorite restaurant?

Tad’s Steakhouse in San Francisco. It reminds me of Waffle House. It’s greasy, heavy food ... covered in onions. Wine glasses are covered in Saran Wrap. It’s delicious food you don’t have to think about. It’s open 24 hours.

What’s in your fridge?

Haven’t been home in about two weeks. Jell-O pudding cups, ice cream sandwiches, Mountain Dew — mostly Mountain Dew.

can duck recipes. I hate cooking duck.”

After selling his restaurant and moving to the D.C. area, Spates began baking in earnest, first by working at the from-scratch Lola’s Cookies and Treats, and then coming to Cookology as its pastry chef and teacher. Now, Spates pitches in to help the executive chef, Ian Douglass, with some of the savory cooking classes and wine dinners. For all his work, he draws upon his background in classical French and American cuisine.

“The food I make,” he said, “I just use a lot of cheese, spices and pepper flavors with such unusual components as agar, aloe, liquid nitrogen, guar gum, agave root and yak butter. I like things that are complex.”

So it should surprise no one that this offbeat guy looks for inspiration in hundred-year-old cookbooks and spends whatever spare time he has dreaming up crazy desserts such as the “Alice in Wonderland”-themed cake the studio hired him to produce for the film’s premiere. It also should

IF YOU GO
Cookology

» Where: Dulles Town Center, 21100 Dulles Town Circle, Sterling
» Info: 703-433-1909
» Hours: 10 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. Monday to Saturday; 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday

be no surprise that he has spent the past three years perfecting cupcakes and making big, splashy cakes, such as the $24,000 “steam punk” cake he created for a nightclub.

“It fed 1,500 people,” he said. “It had 7,500 steam pumps, and it was all edible.”

Although he said he has settled down, who will be surprised that at some point this young guy goes off to fulfill another dream?

“I want to go back to the [Culinary Institute] because I want to earn a grilling master’s chef jacket,” he said.

Scott Greenberg » The Vine Guy Wines good for Father’s Day

This weekend is Father’s Day. In my house, that means that I am presented with gifts that are suspiciously correlated with specific chores on my wife’s “honey do” list. For example, last year, I got a really cool cordless power tool set, including a drill and circular saw. I wasn’t skeptical until I noticed that the battery pack was already fully charged and a pile of lumber had mysteriously materialized overnight in our backyard. Before I could say, “um, thanks?” I was sawing, drilling and hammering a frame for my wife’s new vegetable garden.

But the one genuine luxury that always awaits me at the end of the day is dinner. I get to throw a couple of thick-cut porterhouse steaks on the grill and open up a great bottle of wine — assuming of course, all of my chores are done.

To kick off Father’s Day on the right note, pop open a bottle of Non-vintage Pommery “Pop” Extra Dry Champagne from Reims, France ($50). Tiny bubbles carry hints of citrus fruit and creamy yeast on the floral bouquet. The palate poses a creamy mouthfeel with notes of crisp green apple, nectarine and pear. Hints of citrus highlight the medium-crisp finish and the bubbles add a certain measure of elegance. Perfect all by itself and even better with oysters on the half shell.

Of course, a big, fat juicy steak is always a sure-fire way to reward dad on his special day, especially if you pair it with the 2006 Mercury The Father Red Wine Blend from Alexander Valley, California ($34). This powerful red wine is a blend of cabernet franc, merlot and petit verdot and is big enough to stand up to heartier fare. Scents of black plums, cocoa and espresso entice the nose while flavors of earthy red plum and black cherry coat the palate on the well-balanced frame. The sweet tannins provide great structure, capable of cutting through the fat in the meat while delivering a long finish where notes of blackberry jam and roasted coffee leave a wonderful impression.

One of the varietals that I routinely head for when I am in the mood for grilled lamb is Shiraz. There is something about the big tannins and peppery frame that seem to be made for lamb. The 2003 Charles Melton Shiraz “The Father In-Law” from the Barossa Valley in South Australia ($19) has everything that I am looking for. From the warm bouquet of black cherry, cassis and pepper to the flavorful and muscular frame of jammy black fruit, blueberry liqueur and spices, this well-balanced wine has a lot to offer. The notes of toasty oak and cracked black pepper add a spicy character to the long, powerful finish.

If your Father’s Day celebration requires a little “old world” charm, try the 2006 Papa Luna Old Vine Red that hails from Calatayud, Spain ($18). This blend of old vine Garnacha, Syrah, Monastrell and Carignan is aged for five months in used French and American oak which lends a light touch of oak, cedar and vanilla to the earthy nose. The plush palate delivers layers of dark boysenberry, black cherry and smokey plum on the attack and notes of cigar box and vanilla on the velvety smooth finish. This would really pair well with dry-rubbed babyback ribs or grilled pork chops.

From the Piedmont region of Italy comes the wonderfully textured 2005 Viberti Barolo “Buon Padre” ($47). This classic Nebbiolo wine is for any “good father” who wants to enjoy a little pasta with Bolognese sauce this weekend. The aromas of earthy plum, orange peel and smoky cedar give way to flavors of cassis, blackberries and roasted meat upfront and hint of dried cherry and tobacco on the powerful finish. The soft tannins give this wine elegant structure and age-ability so you can enjoy it now or save it for future celebrations.

I had the good fortune to run into Stephen Cary — the winemaker at Yamhill Winery in Willamette Valley, Oregon — in a local wine shop a couple of months ago. He was pouring samples of the 2006 Yamhill Winery Tall Poppy Pinot Noir ($50). Stephen explained the phrase “tall poppy” is a New Zealand expression that refers to a flamboyant extrovert or an ambitious bloke whose reach is beyond his grasp. While it may appear to be a derogatory term, in the end it describes a person who talks the big talk but then actually delivers, as does this wine, which possesses a remarkably perfumed nose of wild strawberries and bright cherries leading to lush flavors of dark strawberry, red plum and cherry cola. Hints of mocha remain delicate and charming all the way through to the elegant finish. If your plans include grilled salmon, then your salmon needs a Tall Poppy.

An adventurous path to the kitchen

By Alexandra Greeley
Special to The Washington Examiner

When you come across a chef who is bursting with energy, intelligence and talent, you may just sit back and say “Wow.” Well-traveled and steeped in the lore of pastry arts, Brad Spates, who is the pastry chef at the cooking school Cookology at Dulles Town Center, is a cooking inspiration, a one-of-a-kind guy, someone who turned down a place at MIT to bake; who travels to Tibet with his dog; who has owned and cooked for his own tiny restaurant in Beijing and who, as executive chef, makes cupcakes for Lola’s in Leesburg. Aside from all that, he works long hours at Cookology, baking, cooking and teaching.

A graduate of both the Culinary Institute of America and the James Rumsey Technical Institute in Martinsburg, W.Va., Spates also has polished his baking skills with some of the best in his profession, including Master Chef Judeth Stains and Culinary Institute Award-winning chefs Steve Brown and Steve Weiss, executive pastry chefs of the Trump Taj Mahal and Caesars Palace in Las Vegas.

For someone who acknowledges that his earliest culinary training was working at a Dunkin’ Donuts in New York City, Spates has come a long way, baby.

“I loved making doughnuts,” he said. “I loved the fast pace, and the fact you could think about 110 things at once, which I loved. I love working 80 hours a week. I love to keep moving.”

Imagine that at the age of 16, after turning down a scholarship to MIT, a teen turns up at the Culinary Institute.

“I was really too young to be a student, because the youngest they take you is 17 years old,” he said, adding he then went to the Cordon Bleu in Paris. When he returned to the Culinary Institute later, Spates spent a year studying classical French cooking, and the second year studying pastry.

“I love the art side of cooking, so I really love pastry,” he said.

After graduation, he went back to Paris, where he signed on to a restaurant as a line cook, but advanced to executive chef and pastry chef after six months. After five years in France, Spates took a year off to travel throughout Asia, ending up in Beijing owning his French-American restaurant.

“At first, we sold only sandwiches,” he said, admitting that since he did not speak Mandarin, he relied on his English-speaking staffers for some rather critical help: ordering food, helping customers and organizing his cooks. “After a year, it became popular and we served Italian and Ameri-

Brad Spates is the pastry chef at the school Cookology at Dulles Town Center.

SAMUEL CORUM/FOR THE WASHINGTON EXAMINER

What is your comfort food?

Vanilla wafers, yeah, vanilla wafers. I love everything about them.

Which is your favorite dessert?

Anything with bitter fruit or desserts with heat, that are spicy. Any sorbet, but nothing that is an American classic.

What has been your luckiest moment?

It has to do with my fiancée. I don’t know what to say; we’ve been together forever.

Which is your favorite restaurant?

Tad’s Steakhouse in San Francisco. It reminds me of Waffle House. It’s greasy, heavy food ... covered in onions. Wine glasses are covered in Saran Wrap. It’s delicious food you don’t have to think about. It’s open 24 hours.

What’s in your fridge?

Haven’t been home in about two weeks. Jell-O pudding cups, ice cream sandwiches, Mountain Dew — mostly Mountain Dew.

can duck recipes. I hate cooking duck.”

After selling his restaurant and moving to the D.C. area, Spates began baking in earnest, first by working at the from-scratch Lola’s Cookies and Treats, and then coming to Cookology as its pastry chef and teacher. Now, Spates pitches in to help the executive chef, Ian Douglass, with some of the savory cooking classes and wine dinners. For all his work, he draws upon his background in classical French and American cuisine.

“The food I make,” he said, “I just use a lot of cheese, spices and pepper flavors with such unusual components as agar, aloe, liquid nitrogen, guar gum, agave root and yak butter. I like things that are complex.”

So it should surprise no one that this offbeat guy looks for inspiration in hundred-year-old cookbooks and spends whatever spare time he has dreaming up crazy desserts such as the “Alice in Wonderland”-themed cake the studio hired him to produce for the film’s premiere. It also should

IF YOU GO Cookology

» Where: Dulles Town Center, 21100 Dulles Town Circle, Sterling
» Info: 703-433-1909
» Hours: 10 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. Monday to Saturday; 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday

be no surprise that he has spent the past three years perfecting cupcakes and making big, splashy cakes, such as the $24,000 “steam punk” cake he created for a nightclub.

“It fed 1,500 people,” he said. “It had 7,500 steam pumps, and it was all edible.”

Although he said he has settled down, who will be surprised that at some point this young guy goes off to fulfill another dream?

“I want to go back to the [Culinary Institute] because I want to earn a grilling master’s chef jacket,” he said.

Scott Greenberg » The Vine Guy Wines good for Father’s Day

This weekend is Father’s Day. In my house, that means that I am presented with gifts that are suspiciously correlated with specific chores on my wife’s “honey do” list. For example, last year, I got a really cool cordless power tool set, including a drill and circular saw. I wasn’t skeptical until I noticed that the battery pack was already fully charged and a pile of lumber had mysteriously materialized overnight in our backyard. Before I could say, “um, thanks?” I was sawing, drilling and hammering a frame for my wife’s new vegetable garden.

But the one genuine luxury that always awaits me at the end of the day is dinner. I get to throw a couple of thick-cut porterhouse steaks on the grill and open up a great bottle of wine — assuming of course, all of my chores are done.

To kick off Father’s Day on the right note, pop open a bottle of Non-vintage Pommery “Pop” Extra Dry Champagne from Reims, France ($50). Tiny bubbles carry hints of citrus fruit and creamy yeast on the floral bouquet. The palate poses a creamy mouthfeel with notes of crisp green apple, nectarine and pear. Hints of citrus highlight the medium-crisp finish and the bubbles add a certain measure of elegance. Perfect all by itself and even better with oysters on the half shell.

Of course, a big, fat juicy steak is always a sure-fire way to reward dad on his special day, especially if you pair it with the 2006 Mercury The Father Red Wine Blend from Alexander Valley, California ($34). This powerful red wine is a blend of cabernet franc, merlot and petit verdot and is big enough to stand up to heartier fare. Scents of black plums, cocoa and espresso entice the nose while flavors of earthy red plum and black cherry coat the palate on the well-balanced frame. The sweet tannins provide great structure, capable of cutting through the fat in the meat while delivering a long finish where notes of blackberry jam and roasted coffee leave a wonderful impression.

One of the varietals that I routinely head for when I am in the mood for grilled lamb is Shiraz. There is something about the big tannins and peppery frame that seem to be made for lamb. The 2003 Charles Melton Shiraz “The Father In-Law” from the Barossa Valley in South Australia ($19) has everything that I am looking for. From the warm bouquet of black cherry, cassis and pepper to the flavorful and muscular frame of jammy black fruit, blueberry liqueur and spices, this well-balanced wine has a lot to offer. The notes of toasty oak and cracked black pepper add a spicy character to the long, powerful finish.

If your Father’s Day celebration requires a little “old world” charm, try the 2006 Papa Luna Old Vine Red that hails from Calatayud, Spain ($18). This blend of old vine Garnacha, Syrah, Monastrell and Carignan is aged for five months in used French and American oak which lends a light touch of oak, cedar and vanilla to the earthy nose. The plush palate delivers layers of dark boysenberry, black cherry and smokey plum on the attack and notes of cigar box and vanilla on the velvety smooth finish. This would really pair well with dry-rubbed babyback ribs or grilled pork chops.

From the Piedmont region of Italy comes the wonderfully textured 2005 Viberti Barolo “Buon Padre” ($47). This classic Nebbiolo wine is for any “good father” who wants to enjoy a little pasta with Bolognese sauce this weekend. The aromas of earthy plum, orange peel and smoky cedar give way to flavors of cassis, blackberries and roasted meat upfront and hint of dried cherry and tobacco on the powerful finish. The soft tannins give this wine elegant structure and age-ability so you can enjoy it now or save it for future celebrations.

I had the good fortune to run into Stephen Cary — the winemaker at Yamhill Winery in Willamette Valley, Oregon — in a local wine shop a couple of months ago. He was pouring samples of the 2006 Yamhill Winery Tall Poppy Pinot Noir ($50). Stephen explained the phrase “tall poppy” is a New Zealand expression that refers to a flamboyant extrovert or an ambitious bloke whose reach is beyond his grasp. While it may appear to be a derogatory term, in the end it describes a person who talks the big talk but then actually delivers, as does this wine, which possesses a remarkably perfumed nose of wild strawberries and bright cherries leading to lush flavors of dark strawberry, red plum and cherry cola. Hints of mocha remain delicate and charming all the way through to the elegant finish. If your plans include grilled salmon, then your salmon needs a Tall Poppy.

